The full report includes three files all available at http://www.ssc.wisc.edu/%7Eoliver/RACIAL/StateTrends/StateTrends2007.htm
(1) RacialPatterns_Intro_National.pdf   Includes introduction and national graphs.
(2) This file: StateGraphs.pdf   Includes all state graphs (fifteen graphs for each of 32 states, eight pages per state). Useful for seeing the trends within one state at a time. (Separate files for each state are also available.)
(3) AllStateGraphs.pdf   Color graphs comparing time trends of all states. Each graph shows all states for one race and one admission type. Useful for seeing how states compare to each other.

This file contains fifteen monochrome graphs printed on eight pages for each of 32 states.   States vary greatly in their trends in the 1990s and in the relative importance of revocations vs. sentences and drug versus other crimes. Some data points or graphs are missing for some states where the information is partial.   Different presentations of the same information are provided to offer different points of comparison.   These graphs are in black and white and will photocopy well. There are two sets of graphs for each state.

(A) The first set of graphs compares the races for each type of prison admission. For each type of admission, one graph shows the rates for the four racial groups and the other the disparity ratios across time.

(B) The second set of graphs compares the different types of admission for each race. For each race, one graph shows the rates and the other the disparity ratios across time for the four admission types. The rate graphs give a visual impression of the relative importance of the four types of prison admissions to the total: the sizes of the gaps between drug and non-drug admissions show the importance of the drug war for each race. The gaps between sentence and revocation rates show the importance of revocations in prison admissions. The disparity graphs typically show how, for Blacks and Hispanics, drug offenses are much more disparate than other types of crime.

Methodological Note

When no prison admissions for a racial group is recorded, it is hard to know whether there truly were no prison admissions for that group, or the data were missing. Additionally, rates fluctuate wildly if zeroes are treated as data rather than missing. For this reason, if a state recorded zero prison admissions for a given racial group in a given year, the value was treated as missing.
